Concept/Originality:

This is a model adaptation of the biblical story "The Prodigal's Son". I find the theme of intergenerational conflict especially salient in our social media run world. There are a number of themes that will resonate with the audience. I do think one of them must be central to the story.

Structure:

The story holds all three themes in equal balance, which muddles the character, character actions and scene choices.

Plot:

The plot is fairly straight forward until the end when the Protagonist "saves" the family business. I was interested by the inner workings of the Venture Capitalist company.

Pacing:

The pacing collapses a bit because there are very few contemplative moments with the protagonist. These moments are necessary. They give the audience a beat to process what just happened with the story and connect the dots.

Characters:

You must choose one protagonist. Even in ensemble stories, there is one character that is responsible for the inciting action and motivates the interaction with the other characters throughout the story.

There are too many foils. The Foils selected should have relative impact on the action of the story.

Dialogue:

The Antagonist seems non-descript and his dialogue reinforces this. He needs to have a reason to do the job other than money. Preferably a reason that runs counter the protagonist's goals.
